

COLLIES AT HOME

Tony, in Nevada, lost his best friend, collie Hunter, SWCR Class of '14, to cancer earlier this year. Grief-stricken, he asked to be considered for another collie. We soon rescued Tinsel, '18, above, and her littermate, Amber. Tony met Tinsel first, and she made sure to stand next to him when he met Amber. The unspoken but obvious message: "He's mine!" And he was.

Roger, a retired teacher in Alamogordo, adopted sheltie Toby, '17. [Personal note: Roger began teaching SWCR President Kathy Wallis how to play the violin when she was just 10 years old.]

Collie fashionista Chloe, '16, from the Albuquerque area, is all dressed up for Easter. Love the pink bonnet!

Brody '16 and best friend Joy live in California. They met on a transport, and were so sweet together that Brody's adopter, Margaret, decided to adopt Joy too.

Elderly Jesse, '07 and his good buddy Jack the cat live in rural Mayhill, NM.

Xena, now Nina, '18, was emaciated when we rescued her. She also had a cough, which vets assumed was kennel cough. Then she was adopted by a great couple in Albuquerque, above. But when the cough didn't improve, we took her to VCA, where she was diagnosed with and treated for lungworms. We'd never heard of them. Turns out they're as disgusting as they sound.

Happy boy Logan, '16, was horribly infested with ticks and spent nine months at the Las Cruces shelter. Now he lives with adopters Pete and Deborah, two horses and a cat in Litchfield Park, AZ.

We'd love to see your adopted collie or sheltie in the newsletter!
